Excerpt: . . . teaching of scientific medicine to-day. One of the worst cases of epilepsy we were ever called upon to treat occurred in a girl only five years of age, and it was not until after two years of the closest watchfulness that we were convinced that morbid and precocious sexual instinct was at the foundation of the whole trouble. Discovery of the cause led at once to the remedy and a cure. We have advocated and practiced circumcision in suitable cases for many years; not because we realized its importance as a prophylactic or cure of many obscure nervous disorders, but from sanitary and hygienic considerations and as a preventive of masturbation. Some eight or ten years ago we addressed letters of enquiry to a number of Jewish physicians of this city asking them their opinion of the relative frequency of masturbation among the circumcised...
